

Fukuyama Uzumi-Gohan

By Public Transport

Dining

"Uzumi" is a long-running local cuisine of Fukuyama established in the Edo period. There are various opinions but Uzumi Gohan, also simply called "uzumi," is a rice dish of Fukuyama that is said to have its origins in the Edo period (1603-1868), when extravagant ingredients, such as chicken and shrimp, were forbidden due to frugality code imposed by the government.

Houmei-shu

By Public Transport

Dining

This medicinal liquor is steeped in 16 different herbs and was made in Tomo by Kichibei Nakamura, who was a doctor of Chinese medicine in Osaka in 1659. In the Edo period (1603-1867) it was sent as a gift to the shogunate as a specialty of the Fukuyama domain. It is also said that it was used by the shogunate to entertain Commodore Perry and Consul General Harris at the end of the Edo period.

Dishes Using a Red Sea Bream

By Public Transport

Dining

Sea bream are an integral part of celebrations. Dishes made with sea bream from the Seto Inland Sea can be enjoyed at restaurants in Tomo. Such dishes include "tai somen" noodles, which features whole sea bream, and "tai-meshi" rice, which fishermen used to eat aboard their ships. Cuisine featuring other small fish besides sea bream is also delicious, such as fried fish and fish cake.

Fukuyama Rose Park

By Public Transport

Main Attractions

The history of Fukuyama as a city of roses began when 1,000 roses were planted after the war to bring color to the desolate streets and restore peace in people's hearts. Today, there are around 5,500 roses of 280 different varieties in the park. The park is the main venue of the Fukuyama Rose Festival held every year in May and is a place where citizens come to rest.
