

Ishiyaki Cuisine

By Public Transport

Dining

Ishiyaki is a fragrant local cuisine born from the daily lives of Oga fishermen. Stones from the coast called Iki-ishi, or Kana-ishi, are grilled on charcoal for about three hours. The red-hot stones are then placed in a wooden pail filled with fresh seafood to boil the contents in an instant. The dynamic preparation helps to firm up the fish and bring out the best flavor.

OgaShottsuru Yakisoba

By Public Transport

Dining

OgaShottsuru Yakisoba gets its delicious flavor from one of Japan's three major fish sauces, Akita's specialty Shottsuru. The prefecture's prided traditional condiment made of fermented fish does not have a fishy smell but only a light, refined flavor. It is worth a try with the special light-green noodles made with powdered seaweed and kelp soup stock, and plenty of seafood from the Sea of Japan. You've got to try it!

Akagami Shrine Goshado

By Public Transport

Main Attractions

The Akagami Shrine Goshado, designated an Important Cultural Property of Japan, presents the grand sight of five main buildings of uniform design standing in a straight line on a mountain some 180 m high. Believed to be built in the mid-Edo period (1603–1868), the structures display rare architectural techniques in the pent roof, the roof itself, the pillars, and the dougong. According to Oga legend, the 999 steps leading up to the Goshado were laid out overnight by an ogre.
