

Nagoya Cuisine (or Nagoya Food)

By Public Transport

Dining

Nagoya's unique food culture is known nationwide as "Nagoya-meshi." There is a particular way to enjoy their eel dish "hitsumabushi," and their "tebasaki" or chicken wings has a different twist that is uniquely Nagoya. It has a salty-sweet taste with a spicy kick. The red miso used for the famous miso katsu (pork cutlet with miso sauce) dish is one of many prime examples of Nagoya-meshi. What better time to try some of these delicacies than during a stay in Nagoya?

Hitsumabushi (Grilled eel with rice)

By Public Transport

Dining

When it comes to eel dishes, the classic example in Japanese cuisine is "Una-ju," or braised eel served on rice in a rectangular lacquered box. However, in Nagoya, the preferred dish is hitsumabushi, where the eel is cut into small pieces. What is also unique to Nagoya is the way the dish is eaten. The first serving is consumed normally, then the second serving is consumed with wasabi, nori and scallion. The third serving is covered in dashi stock and eaten as an ochazuke (mixture of rice and hot tea, or soup). Please try this at least once during your time in Nagoya.

Tebasaki (Fried Chicken wing)

By Public Transport

Dining

"Karaage" or fried chicken is one of the most popular dishes in Japan. However, in Nagoya, "tebasaki" or chicken wings are a staple on the menu, especially in izakayas, or Japanese-style bars. Each restaurant has its own way of preparing and presenting the dish, so one can never get tired of trying this dish in different restaurants.
