Kumano Beef

By Public Transport

Dining

Kumanoushi, or cattle native to Kumano, is a breed of Japanese cattle that has been raised in the southern part of Wakayama Prefecture for a long time. With selective breeding and by paying attention to pedigree, the quality of the stock has increased to such a degree that the highest grade of Wakayama beef is now known nationwide as Kumano beef. With a fine grain, Kumano beef has a pleasant savory flavor and a superlative meaty texture. The beef also smells delicious when grilled.

Mehari-zushi

By Public Transport

Dining

In the Kumano region, the lunches prepared for people working in the mountains are large sushi as big as a child's head, and locally known as "mehari-zushi." The expression "mehari kuchihari" refers to the way you must open your eyes and mouth wide to eat these large sushi.

This is a simple dish consisting of a parcel of rice wrapped in "takana" mustard green leaf. In recent years, the rice parcel has also been stuffed with various savory edibles, thus adding some fun and flavor to this traditional lunchtime snack.

Nachiguro Suzuri (an inkstone)

By Public Transport

Shopping

Nachi-gurosuzuri, or the Nachi black inkstone, was something that pilgrims to Kumano, or the three sacred sites of Kumano, took home as proof of their visit. The natural state of the Nachi black inkstone symbolizes the solemn reverence for Buddhist Paradise, and is treasured for its unique qualities and hard composition.

Yatagarasu

By Public Transport

Shopping

The "yata-garasu" is a three-legged raven that appears in some of the oldest Japanese myths. "Yata" means large or broad. This raven is an embodiment of the sun and has three legs. Each leg is said to represent heaven, earth and humanity. The image of the yata-garasu is represented on a variety of goods, such as omamori charms and fans, etc., which bestow protection and/or blessings on their owners.

Kumano Sanzan (Kumano Three Grand shrines)

By Public Transport

Main Attractions

The southern part of the Kii Peninsula, known since ancient times as Kumano, was famous as a hiding place for gods and spirits of the departed. Since then, people have come to worship at the Three Grand Shrines of Kumano, namely Hongu, Shingu and Nachi. The Three Grand Shrines of Kumano became famous after it had reached a 100 visitations from various emperors. Commoners have been permitted to worship at Kumano since the Kamakura Period, when it became known as "Ari-no-Kumanomode" (Ants' Pilgrimage to Kumano) due to the large amount of pilgrims.

Oto festival

By Public Transport

Topics

The Kumano Oto Festival is held each year on February 6 at the Kumano Hayatama Grand Shrine and Kamikura Shrine. Around 2,000 men dressed in white clothing, with rough straw rope bound around their waists and midriffs, carry flaming torches by hand and race up the stone steps from one shrine to the other. The men chant a famous tune called the Shingu-bushi, the words to which are: "The Oto Fire Festival is a men's festival, the mountain has turned into a fire waterfall; the dragon descends the mountain." The festival is famous in the area as a harbinger of springtime.

Nachi-no-Ogi matsuri (Nachi Fire festival)

By Public Transport

Topics

The Nachi-no-Ogi matsuri (Nachi Fire festival) is known as one of Japan's big three fire festivals. The flames are used to cleanse the spirits of the 12 deities that are enshrined in Kumano. The twelve deities are temporarily re-housed in 6m tall "mikoshi" portable shrines. Then they are transported from the main shrine buildings to the Nachi Falls. Each of the mikoshi proceeds on the path lit by huge flaming torches weighing between 50kg to 60kg.
