

The Interior of the Great Buddha

When viewed from the inside, the sophistication of the techniques used to construct the Great Buddha becomes apparent. Examination of the interior walls with their large lattice-pattern sections reveals that the statue was made from some forty individually cast segments. At the junctures of these various segments, three different types of casting mechanisms were employed.