

The Great Buddha in Historical Texts

The Great Buddha is mentioned in many historical texts, including plays and travel accounts from the Edo period (1603–1868). Some of these texts are public records that can help us to reconstruct how the statue was made in the mid-thirteenth century, while later accounts describe the repeated destruction of the large hall that once housed the image and the eventual restoration of the statue itself.