

Hanaze

Hanaze's intriguing geography was formed thousands of years ago, when a volcanic explosion in the area resulted in an accumulation of pyroclastic flow. Over time the river currents gradually eroded the volcanic rock, resulting in a riverbed so flat it looks like a stone pavement. At 60 meters wide and 2 kilometers long, this unusual natural phenomenon is a reminder of Kagoshima's natural history.